13,000 Strikers Protest Death Of a Colleague

SEOUL - About 13,000 striking workers, angered by the death of fellow striker, occupied South Korea's largest shipyard Thursday in the southern city of Ulsan, and some burned cars, destroyed office equipment and stormed a tourist hotel. Hundreds of other strikes continued around the country, including one at the nation's second largest automaker, Daewoo Motor Co. The police also reported renewed unrest on the nation's college cam-puses. About 5,500 students, just back from summer holidays, staged allies, sit-ins and demonstrations on 18 campuses to protest govern-ment and school administration

President Chun Doo Hwan said he was confident that the country could overcome the labor unrest, which he called "a one-time fever for a leap forward."

Prime Minister Kim Chung Yul talked with top law-enforcement officials, but no drastic government action appeared imminent

At Ulsan, a striker was killed Thursday morning as he and hundreds of colleagues were guarding the streets outside a stadium where more than 20,000 shipyard workers were staging an overnight sit-in.

SANTIAGO - Opposition parcade of repression and disunity, term as president.

The agreement excludes the Communists but covers a broad political spectrum from the rightist National Party through the centrist Christian Democrats to the moderate-left Socialist Party.

The strategy, adopted in a series of meetings in the last week, calls for a nonviolent mobilization of voters in favor of "free elections."

In practice, this means organizing voters to cast "no" votes in a plebiscite to be held next year in which General Pinochet is asking for a "yes" vote to continue in power until 1997.

"We have agreed after a series of meetings," said Ricardo Lagos of the Socialist Party, "to coordinate our message and our resources in a national campaign that will mobilize voters against Pinochet." The Chileun opposition, scattered among six major parties and various splinter groups, has suffered from divisions, personality conflicts and lack of money in more than a decode under the military government. This year, the government offered to legalize non-Marxist parties and re-register vot-

Although lacking money, the opposition is encouraged in the belief that General Pinochet can be beaten in a fair election. In recent public opinion polls, fewer than 20 percent of voters said they would vote for General Pinochet. Undecided voters ranged from 10 percent to 30 percent in various poils.

In addition, resistance has been growing in the armed forces and conservative political factions to General Pinochet's campaign to stay in power beyond 1989. Earlier this summer, the com-

WASHINGTON -- Paul A. Volcker, whose tight money policies at the Federal Reserve Board helped tame double-digit inflation, exercised financial austerity at home as well, regularly carting his dirty clothes to his daughter's home to be laundered, according to a new

In a biography of the former Fed chairman to be published later this month, the author, William R. Neikirk quotes family members and friends who describe the world's most powerful banker as a dedicated penny-

Mr. Volcker drove automobiles until they fell apart, railed about the high cost of Washington restaurants, only smoked cheap eigars and lived austerely in an apartment cluttered with newspapers, eight butts and hand-fied fishing flies. Mr. Neikirk wrote.

"His clothes are kind of rumpled up. He really doesn't care a lot about his appearance. He's just sort of cheap." Mr. Volcker's daughter, Janice, is quoted as saying in "Volcker: Portrait of the Money Man."

Unlike many of the bankers he regulated, Mr. Volcker hated to spend money, the book says. He bought his daughter, a nurse who lives near Washington in northern Virginia, a washer and dryer "and then proceeded to carry over his laundry every week or so in a suitcase for her to clean." Mr. Neikirk wrote.

"I could see I was getting corralled into that," the daughter told Mr. Neikirk.

Mr. Volcker, appointed by President Jimmy Carter in 1979 and reappointed in 1983 by President Ronald Reagan to a second four-year term as Fed chairman, played down his own role in breaking the inflation that had soared to 13.3 percent when he took office.

Instead, he credited Mr. Reagan's refusal to back down during the air controller's strike in 1981 as having an almost equally important psychological impact as the Fed's restrictive monetary policies, which sent interest rates soaring but also helped reduce inflation to less than 4 percent by 1982.

Alan Greenspan, Mr. Volcker's successor at the Fed. however, gave Mr. Volcker credit "to a substantial extent" in the book for reversing the inflation of the 1970s.

In the final days of his time at the Fed, the book says, Mr. Volcker would have agreed to accept another fouryear term if Mr. Reagan had personally sought to dissuade him from retiring. But no such direct appeal was made.

The book says Mr. Volcker had two passions off the job: fishing and playing Monopoly with his friends and family, at which he was described as fiercely competitive.

WASHINGTON - Air travelers in the United States will be able to learn if their planned flight is likely to arrive on time, under a new ruling by Transportation Secretary Elizabeth H. Dole.

The ruling announced Wednesday, will require by early next year that the information on flight delays be available at travel agencies or airline ticket offices. It was made arnid rising consumer complaints and efforts in Congress to pass laws seeking to improve airline service and safety.

The ruling also requires that comparative statistics he provided on how often airlines lose, delay or damage baggage.

While the rule requires that travel agents and airline ticket clerks have the delayed flight information available, they are not required to provide it to customers except upon request.

Representative Guy V. Molinari. Republican of New York, said Mrs. Dole's action was too late. "Congress is in a rather ugly mood," he added, predicting swift passage of a package of airline bills in the House of Representatives. They would establish fines for airlines that have poor performance records and would require that the airlines and the government establish toll-free telephone numbers for the public to register complaints.

The ruling applies to the nation's 14 largest airlines, which account for 63 percent of all flights and 90 percent of all domestic airline revenue. QUEBEC — Delegates to a conference of 41 French-speaking nations and territories have begun by deleting divisive political issues from their agenda as human-rights 'advocates demonstrated outside. La Francophonie, the Frenchspeaking world's counterpart to the Commonwealth, was meeting for only the second time at the level of government leaders, after an initial conference in Paris 18 months ago.

The hope is to turn the organization into a powerful forum for fostering economic and technical aid and for promoting the French language and culture. The member countries have a [Foreign Minister Joe Clark said in a statement that debts owed by Senegal, Zaire, Madagascar, Cameroon, the Congo, Ivory Coast and Gabon would be written off because Canada is "seeking to make concrete gestures out of promises discussed by the summit participants."

Arrangements at the conference underlined the still tenuous nature of the organization.

Major political issues that divide the members — for example, the occupation of Cambodia by Vietnam, which is represented at the meeting by a vice president, Nguyen Huu Tho - have been kept off the agenda.

So too has any discussion of human-rights abuses, which are said to be widespread in many member countries, particularly in Another target of the protests was the Burundi president, Jean-Baptiste Bagaza, who heads an administration accused by its opponents of complicity in a massacre 13 years ago of as many as 300,000 members of the Hutu tribe.

Even Canada and France, nations at the hub of the organization, were meeting in an atmosphere of suppressed tension.

Although their differences over Quebec for 20 years have been largely resolved, there are new strains because of French concern that Canada intends to challenge French commercial primacy in former French colonies in Africa and Asia.

He added: "Psychologically, it is hard to realize that your fluency in Twi or Tagalog is totally worthless after years of effort in producing those polished skills. It's a shock to the system. For some it is a pretty serious problem because they don't have easily marketable skills."

Acceptance into the highly competitive Foreign Service has traditionally marked one as a winner. Of the 18,000 people who took the entry examin 1985, only 250 entered the service. For many of these high achievers, involuntary retirement is seen as failure, and they are reluctant even to talk about it.

One officer scheduled for retirement is one of the department's most knowledgeable experts on international trade. Another is an expert on Third World debt issues. The American Foreign Service Association says many officers faced with forced retirement are skilled linguists in Russian, East Enropean

The process has been compounded by the number of politcal appointments by the Reagan administration, which has left 23 fewer top jobs open to career officers.

50 percent just over a year ago. On the heels of the poll came reports that some of the mayor's fellow Democrats were beginning to hold meetings to discuss who should succeed him if he is indicted or forced to resign.

Mr. Barry has said all along that there might be "some bad apples" in his administration. But he contends there is no widespread corruption. "What you have," he said in a recent interview, "is a dozen people in a whole government who have taken advantage of the system. It's overblown. We don't have systemwide corruption. It's individual corruption. The mayor, supported by other black politicians, has also accused the investigators of racism. The United States has claimed to be pressuring Iraq to stop its atacks, but Baghdad has not. The 12-nation European Community, which gets 26 percent of its oil supplies from the Gulf, issued a ioint statement Thursday deploring

Mr. Rome said the increase was made necessary by the growing tension in the Gulf since the weekend, when Iraq and Iran resumed attacks on commercial ships and oil installations after a six-week lull. The increase did not apply to the Gulf of Oman but did apply to the Strait of Hormuz, the entrance to the Gulf, he said.

The new premiums mean, for example, that ships calling at Larak Island in the Strait of Hormuz will see their war risk premiums raised to 0.375 percent of the value of the vessel from 0.25 percent.

An Invitation

The International Herald Tribune and Oxford Analytica present a special conference on The International Business Outlook University College, Oxford, September 16-19, 1987.

Journaleged top management executives at the Fourth Annual International Besides Outlook Conference in the peaceful environment of University College. You will participate with small study teams of leading academic experts in addressing the current economic, social and political trends in key regions of the world.

The combination of specific up to date buchings, high-level analyses and stimulating exchanges provides a care opportunity over three days for in-depth discussion and reflection on the world business climate. The conference will close with a dinner at Blenbern Palace to be addressed by the development, the United States escapes some simplistic oratory, silly Soviet propaganda and requests to commit funds it cannot commit. It also throws away a chance to learn and to lead on critical issues, and moves further down the regrettable path of thwarting rather than encouraging international cooperation.

The State Department's explanation for boycotting the conference, now under way in New York, is: "We believe disarmament and development are not issues that should be considered interrelated." That is not farfetched. People gathered to talk over these two topics are unlikely to switch easily from spending for guns to spending for butter.

Yet the conference grows out of broader thinking. It is the brainchild not of some radical kook but of President François Mitterrand of France. The world's resources are limited and arms eat up a towering proportion, nearly $1 trillion a year. The arms industry is the leading moneymaker in many industrialized countries. Little wonder that human imagination seeks new ways to beat swords into plowshares.

The Soviet Union, with its new public relations skill, came to the conference brimming with ideas on how development might progress if less were squandered on arms. Yet it is the world's foremost arms merchant, having overtaken the United States. It arms than any other major power. Its spending on development aid is dismally small.

Developing countries are coming to see that their future depends on finding their own economic answers. The West has much to gain by encouraging this pragmatism, and by helping governments see their security more in the health, education and opportunities open to their people than in the size of their armies. All of America's allies in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization are at the conference valiantly making these points. The United States sits out the opportunity.

This boycott is part of a larger trend, which has found the United States in the Reagan years resisting international cooperation — in the Law of the Sea treaty, World Court jurisdiction in the Nicaragua conflict, and in withholding funds for family planning. Washington sent such a lowlevel delegate to a recent UN conference on trade and development that he aptly de-scribed himself as a "traveling insult."

The insult is to the American people.

Encouraging worldwide community and cooperation is very much in the American interest. That does not require saintly acceptance of bombast at international conferences. The United States would have had a strong case against some of the glib oratory at this one. Would that it were there to make it.

— THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Picking the Next Congress

1988 presidential campaign, which is well under way, leaves in the darkness the other 468 federal elections that will be held next year: the contests for Congress. They should not be ignored. The candidates for president promise a wide range of policies. from Jack Kemp's gold standard to the Reverend Jesse Jackson's moratorium on farm foreclosures. But most of those policies would have to be passed by Congress. Voters knew when they re-elected Ronald Reagan in 1984 that he would try to cut domestic spending and increase defense. But they knew that same day, when they reelected their mostly Democratic congressmen, that Congress would limit domestic cuts and defense increases.

Insiders now think the next Congress will be much like the current one. House strategists for both parties are targeting only a few opposition seats, and not many incumbents seem to be retiring. In 1984 and 1986 the overwhelming majority of House in-cumbents were re-elected. So there is not likely to be much change in the House.

There is more possibility of movement in the Senate, and even an outside chance that the Republicans might regain control, if only because there are fewer contests. Individual strengths and weaknesses, odd-duck local issues and sheer luck can play a role, as they did in enabling first the Republicans in 1980 and then the Democrats in 1986 to win almost all the close races and, against the odds, take control. The Democrats have more seats up this time, 18 to 15, and thus should be more vulnerable, but the political events of the first eight months of this year decisions to run or not to run, local issues tended to favor the Democrats. Developments of the last week, however - William Proxmire's retirement from the Senate. Representative Connie Mack's apparent decision to run in Florida, U.S. Attorney Rudolf Giuliani's pondering of a candidacy in New York — may mean fewer absolutely safe Democratic seats and more serious contests. Over a two-year period the battle for Senate control is a seesaw affair in which you keep guessing which side will end up on top.

The race for control of Congress is much less volatile than the race for president, with a far smaller range of possible outcomes. But we should not focus on the presidential race alone. We properly match the candidates their competence, character, issue positions - against one another. But we need to ask also how they would work with the kind of Congress they are likely to get: one that is pretty similar to the one we have now.

--- THE WASHINGTON POST.

Consider the Supercosts

loudly and vigorously to be the site of the superconducting supercollider, there is one thing that you should know. The Congress has not yet authorized the money to build it. The project's supporters, which include the Reagan administration, think it will be helpful to have the legislation moving along while a large number of congressmen are anxiously trying to grab the project for their states. But there is more at stake here than its location.

The key issue is financing. The supercollider would be the largest scientific research instrument ever built, and probably the most expensive. It would be a circular tunnel 52 miles (84 kilometers) in circumference (the Beltway around Washington, for comparison, is 64 miles) containing beams of protons steered by immensely powerful magnets. Because the magnets are to be made of superconductors, they would have to be refrigerated to very low temperatures. The idea is to achieve collisions among the protons at energy levels far higher than those achieved in any laboratory before. In the debris, physicists will learn much about the basic structure of matter and of the universe. It is a brilliant concept and holds much promise.

It will cost $4.4 billion in today's dollars, plus the inflation of the six years or so required to build it. Running it will cost several hundred million dollars a year.

it intends the federal government to provide this money in addition to its present funding for basic scientific research. But that will not be the Reagan administration's decision. Nearly all of the money will be appropriated after the next presi dent takes office. The final choices will be made, in any case, by the Congress, Congress ought to build the supercollider only - repeat, only - if it is prepared to do it without cutting the present. barely adequate support for other scientific work. High-energy physics is exciting. but not the only exciting field in physics nor necessarily the most productive. Congress's first priority needs to be funds to support work in university laboratories. which not only advances knowledge but contributes to the essential process of training the young scientists who are grad-uate students. The supercollider, representing a tremendous investment in one narrow series of experiments, will make only a modest contribution there. It is a matter of balance. If the supercollider were to begin draining other, less spectacular research projects to meet its own extraordinary costs, the results would leave physics weaker. Before Congress votes money for construction, it needs to give very careful thought to the consequences for American science as a whole. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

A Strange Trial in Israel

The trial of Mordechai Vanunu, now taking place in Jerusalem, must be one of the strangest held in a civilized jurisdiction. The charges are not entered on the court record but they are assumed to relate to treasonable acts by Mr. Vanunu in giving intricate details to The Sunday Times [in London] about the secret Dimona nuclear plant. From those disclosures the newspaper was able to deduce that Israel is indeed the sixth nuclear power, with between 100 and 200 weapons. If military secrets are part of the evidence, then naturally a court anywhere will sit in camera, but in Mr. Vanunu's case even his entering and leaving the building is concealed from observers.

Is the evidence now being heard against Mr. Vanunu that he told other unspecified people a good deal more than he told The Sunday Times? For what he told the newspaper did little more than confirm the previous suspicion, amounting to virtual certainty, that Israel had a nuclear deterrent. There is no point in having a deterrent unless the fact is known to those being deterred. Yet nothing that scientists could not infer from the existence of Dimona appeared in his revelations. Warhead de sign? No mention. Means of delivery? No mention. Dirty or clean bomb? Small enough to hit targets close by and not expose Israel to fallout, or large enough to flatten a distant foreign city? No mention.

Belatedly, Reagan Moves Toward the Mainstream

WASHINGTON — Finally President Reagan has pointed the way to every president's goal of a bipartisan foreign policy. It is not that his own policy has achieved that sublime status, but he will leave the country a policy that is considerably less off-center and divisive than the one he ran against in 1980 and the one he himself then installed.

This result has come gradually, but its progress has been greatly accelerated by three events: The first was Mr. Reagan's decision to take the speaker of the House. Jim Wright, a Democrat.

as a partner in Central America. The choice did not give the president a fully wrought bipartisan stand, let alone one assured of success, but it did put him in tentatively bipartisan company on the single most contentious issue of the postwar period: whether to intervene in a foreign country to block a communist opportunity or to advance an American one. He decided to give some extra space to a new diplomatic approach.

Late last month, Mr. Reagan moved on to consolidate bipartisanship in arms control, the arena of high policy in which the strategic relationship with the Soviet Union is most vividly acted out. He adjusted the American position on verification in a proposed treaty limiting intermediate-range nuclear weapons. His earlier posi-tion had been based on the ideologically congenial premise of total distrust of the Soviets. The new one is designed to ensure the kind of verification consistent with achieving an agreement that is otherwise in the American interest. By Stephen S. Rosenfeld

Not all the movement toward bipartisanship has been by the president. This summer the Democrats in Congress, more or less despite themselves, have gone that way on what is, after strategic arms control and intervention in the Third World, the third great issue of American policy: the use of force in hot spots.

President Jimmy Carter had begun by formally raising the official valuation of the American stake in the Gulf region to the level of "vital." The term means that the region is worth defend-ing. The current Congress confirmed the move-ment by endorsing, in its fashion (with many misgivings), the president's naval policy in the Guil. Even those Democrats who favor invoking the Vietnam-era War Powers Act, the law designed to check presidential initiative, make clear that most of them seek not so much to confront the president as to support him.

Suddenly, then, the United States has the makings of a bipartisan foreign policy. The president and Congress got to it inadvertently and by different routes. It has mattered to the White House, for instance, that the Iran-contra affair has taken its toll on the president's standing and that Mikhail Gorbachev is coming on strong. It has mattered to the Democrats that they tend to lose presidential elections.

But perhaps the most important thing is that just as Mr. Carter had enough time in office to toward the left, so Ronald Reagan has had even more time to test and display a policy oriented toward the right. The turn toward the middle arises from experience that is extensive, varied and recent enough to make it politically valid.

Those who seek additional evidence of the turn need only observe how some of the president's most loyal followers are writhing in agony to see him moving to rejoin the mainstream, whose earlier abandonment by him had been the cause of their rejoicing. Probably it is foolish to underestimate their bitterness. But, to confess, it is kind of fun to see the long faces.

It is always good news to find a bit of reality breaking through — especially now in the presi-dential campaign. The early phases of the nominating process are often said to be captive to the more extreme folks of both parties. True or not, Democrats are tending to bunch toward the center, and where Jack Kemp and a few others are cultivating the part of the Republican spectrum that supported Mr. Reagan in his prime, the heavier Republican hitters are in a place that many Democrats could live with.

I do not mean to suggest that passion, venom, individual nuance or, least of all, the capacity for grievous error have gone out of the making of foreign policy. There is political company in the center, but whether there is wisdom and sureness is another matter. Company, however, is worth a lot in this business

An Economic Harpoon Can Stop Japanese Whaling

This voyage not only would defy the International Whaling Commission. which recently judged such "research" unnecessary and irrelevant to efforts to assess whale stocks, but would flout a good-faith accord with the United States to halt whaling in 1987.

For these reasons, the World Wildlife Fund has asked President Reagan to impose punitive economic sanctions on Japan's fishing industry if it takes whales in Antarctica, U.S. law empowers the president to make life difficult for the fishing industry of any nation that seeks to diminish the effectiveness of the International Whaling Commission. Three years ago, after announcing it would not abide by the commission's 1986-1990 moratorium on commercial whaling, Japan found itself vulnerable to an embargo on reduction, by as much as half, in the

Since the commission cannot compel Japan or any other signatory to comply with its rulings, the threat of sanctions is the main source of leverage to conserve global whale stocks.

In a compromise negotiated in 1984 by Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, who died in July, the United States agreed to withhold these sanctions if Japan agreed to end whaling this year. Several environmental groups sued to invalidate the agreement but the Supreme Court upheld the arrangement.

Japan now seems determined to repudiate Mr. Baldridge's good faith agreement under the guise of "research." Last April, shortly after Japan's whaling fleet returned to port with the remains of several thousand whales. Tokso announced it would provide $2.3 million to subsidize the killing of 825 minke whales and 50 sperm whales this coming season for scientific" purposes.

posal can only be viewed as a dishonest ploy to keep its commercial whaling industry active through what remains of the moratorium. What scientists most need to know about whales, their status in the wild, is best learned by the study of living whales. With this in mind, the commission, with strong American support, voted by a wide margin in June to reject Japan's "scientific" whaling plan, as well as plans submitted by celand and South Korea.

Meanwhile, the commission will conduct a comprehensive assessment of whale stocks using nonlethal techniques, after which it hopes to deliver an informed judgment about the future of commercial whaling. The other major force in whaling, the Soviet Union, has announced it will not send its fleet out next year. Iceland and Norway, which kill many fewer whales, are close to ending their the moratorium - humanity's best whaling. Japanese politicians and officials claim they do not fear sanctions, in part because Japan's fish catch in U.S. waters is dramatically lower now than it was at the time of the Baldrige negotiations. But the fabric of laws governing international conservation is fragile at best. In the interest of reinforcing it. A Day in the Life of Japan's Stalwart, the 'Salaryman'

OKYO — He is hailed here as an "industrial warrior." the driving force behind Japan's economic success. He is also ridiculed in cartoons and commercials as a wimp who lives in terror of the boss's glower and who chews antacids by the case.

He is as much a part of the Japanese cityscape as neon and sushi bars. He is found in dark suit and imported necktie, his short hair parted on the left. No beards or moustaches. Accessories are standard, too - pocket calculator, leather briefcase, commuting pass, business cards, pornographic comic book for subway rides.

He is mass-produced. The "salaryman." as the male white-collar worker is called in Japan, is what most of the 280,000 young men who graduate from universities each year become. The good salaryman devotes him-

Salaryman's wife of 12 years has already been up more than an hour and gotten the two children off to school. Our man was too late getting home the previous night to see them. On Sunday, he is planning to take his wife and children to an amusement park a half hour's drive away - it has been a while since the family had a decent outing together.

"You're still against the Crown?" Salaryman asks. His wife doesn't answer. The Crown is a type Toyota that she feels is not only too expensive but too flashy for someone of his rank at the company.

His wife drives him 10 minutes to the train station, where he slips into a throng of other salarymen embarking on the 70-minute journey to central Tokyo, site of the company where he has been employed since he graduated from college 15 years ago. The

NEW YORK -- Governor Woodrow Wilson has delivered a lecture on the tariff to an audience of 2,000 New Jersey farmers. His statements were couched in keen sentences that will reach the brains dulled by Republican fallacies. He began by showing that the farmers are as directly affected as any other class by what is called "a protective tariff," but is really "the restrictive tariff — the tariff that holds us back, that hems us in, that chokes and smothers us." He pointed out that the farmers have never been consulted in framing the tariff schedules; "while you were feeding the world. Congress was feeding the trusts." WASHINGTON — The debate over a pending U.S.-Soviet treaty on intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Europe is rolling merrily along on a danger-ously faulty premise: that wars usually are intentional. In fact, some of Europe's most destructive wars have slipped up on the blind side, arising from miscalculation. On the ABC television program, "This Week With David Brinkley," General Bernard Rogers, the former NATO commander, was asked recently to imagine a sunrise invasion of Western Europe by massive Warsaw Pact forces. "Pick a date, general," he was told. "Dec. 7, if you will." The general seemed a bit nonphissed, as well be might, for the Pearl Harbor analogy is especially inappropriate. Few students of the European military scene would predict such an attack. It could happen, but other routes to dangerous crisis are far more easily imagined.

For one thing, Russia has historically been a cautious, isolationist power, more invaded than invading. Its tendency to make hearty meals of peripheral states (as now in Afghanistan) springs in part from the insecurity of not having naturally defensible borders. But the insecure are no less prone to miscalculation than the secure. Nikita Khrushchev, who gave us the Cuban missile crisis of 1962, said in his memoirs: "We had no desire to start a war ... Our principal aim was only to By Edwin M. Yoder Jr.

Fewer Missiles Will Mean Fewer Options

deter America from starting a war" to overthrow Fidel Castro. The denial is perfectly credible, but the point is that his miscalculation brought the world as close to nuclear war as it has come.

Getting back to the treaty: As General Rogers explained, the "zero-zero" agreement, under which the United States and the Soviet Union would scrap all theaterrange nuclear missiles of 300- to 3,500mile ranges (500 to 5,700 kilometers). would knock several rungs from the ladder of possible responses to aggression.

Suppose that in the brave new world of a "denuclearized" Europe a regime came to power in Belgrade and proclaimed its intention to heal Tito's "fraternal" breach of 1948. Suppose that this regime, beset (as it would be) by patriotic Yugoslavs, called for Soviet help. How would the prospect look from the Kremlin, in a Europe now demuded of short-range nnclear weapons, where, as a result, the Red Army is the most powerful lighting force? Might the Soviets gamble? No one can say. But who wants to experiment?

Yugoslavia isn't a member of NATO. But its reversion to Soviet vassalage would be precisely the sort of tilt in the European balance of power — dangerous in itself, and more so in the further ambitions it might arouse — that could sorely tempt the Soviets in a rash moment. We must hope not; but the examples of Hun-gary and Czechoslovakia are there.

In such a crisis, it is predictable that the people who think an agreement on intermediate nuclear forces would be wonderful would be saying plausibly enough, that Yugoslav independence, however valuable, is hardly worth the risk of glob-al nuclear war. Which, in fact, is why "extended deterrence" based on U.S. strategic nuclear forces of intercontinental range has steadily lost credibility over the past two decades, and required augmentation on the continent by less cata-strophic weapons like the Pershing-2.

It would be hard to argue that U.S. Euromissiles" keep the Yugoslavs independent. They do a pretty good job of that on their own. But the Euromissiles do broaden the range of nuclear options in the face of Soviet conventional superiority. And to that degree they discourage the rashness that could become tempting in a "nuclear-free" Europe.

The question, then, is why enter an arms control treaty that lowers the nuclear threshold, weakens deterrence and invites adventurism without compensating adjustments in conventional and intercontinental weaponry? For show? For politics? For what?

The Philippine Coup Attempt Gave a Boost to the Left

Aquino is the Philippine left, even attempts to topple her government. though it is nowhere near seizing power. Mrs. Aguino is faced with the difficult task of punishing the approximately 800 officers and men involved in the bloody putsch. Public sentiment seems to favor a tough approach that does not rule out capital punishment for the coup leaders. But this will not endear the president to that sizable portion of the armed forces that played a favored role in the Marcos dictatorship and continues to be inured to the idea that the law can be used against it.

On the other hand, President Aquino could heed conservative warnings from business, the rightist media and indeed

A Sour Taste in Germany

Regarding "West German Food Critic Wages War — Hearthurn Rampant' (Aug. 17) by Ferdinand Protzman:

Not every German drives a Mercedes 500 and can afford to spend a couple of hundred marks in a restaurant. Wolfram Siebeck's temarks on German gusthauses are unqualified and insulting. As a matter of fact most of the German eser and little restaurants offer a good choice and fresh products, and many a foreigner is happy to find local specialties at a reasonable price.

Mr. Snyder, the chief lobbvist for the Citizens Committee for the Right to Bear Arms, seeks the designation of a patron saint of hand gunners would almost be funny were it not for such chilling news reported the day before: "The California Highway Patrol and lo-cal police have reported 10 roadway and in just about each of those years a

The article "Echoing Theme: Cuba vs. U.S." (Sports, Aug. 25) states that the United States "ran away with the medal count" at the recent Pan American Games in Indianapolis, How about stumbled away? Of the 1,016 medals awarded, the United States - with a population in excess of 230 million, not to mention the home advantage -- won 369. Tiny Cuba, with 175 medals, won nearly half the U.S. count.

A Peace Corps volunteer wrote a book said to be the first published in Tunisian Arabic (she had been told it couldn't be done). Sure. some jobs didn't pan out; some volunteers, and staff members, were misfits, but real accomplishment was not rare. Certainly the Peace Corps has profited from experience and the mistakes some of us made 20-odd years ago, and so have similar organizations in France, West Germany, Japan and the Netherlands. the economic state of the union. Many people happily went on about how well they were doing and expected to keep on doing and then said that they thought that the United States, and perhaps the world, was on the verge of an economic collapse.

Things seem good, very good indeed. There is new construction all around and "Help Wanted" signs everywhere, And conspicuous consumption. Out here in Manhattan's summer playground -- New Yorkers "relax" by puting on shorts and talking business with the same people they do business with in suits in the city — the latest excess seems to be old cars. Men are spending about what houses cost in Kansas to show off in impractical adult toys: shiny Rolls-Royces and even Duesenbergs, 30-yearold Cadillac convertibles and, I swear, a fully rigged camouflage-painted Jeep from World War II that I saw cruising the main street of Southampton.

Then they get out of their showboats and talk about the national debt and the taxes that are too low, the trade deficit and inflated markets - and the hard, hard times ahead. A man on a plane advised me to get as much cash as could in small denominations be cause, he said, that's all anyone would take after the rioting and rampage began. He claimed to have $150,000 in Whatever economic problems the United States has or will have, I refuse to believe that the "low productivity" or the "laziness" Americans is a significant factor. We may not be in the same mass-labor stage of industrial development as are, say, the South Koreans or the Taiwanese, but the American two-week vacation is the wonder of a relaxing developed world. Each morning, my wife and I walk along the Atlantic's beaches here, arguably the most beautiful in the world. We rarely see another soul on the sand. The houses facing the sea are empty five or six days a week. Where is everybody? Back in the city, killing themselves for a few more bucks. In Europe, I guarantee you, you can't see the sand for weeks at a time because of the people stretched out across it. And in case we do slow down, we

People seem bigger, too. Is it my imagination or is there a new obesity in America? I don't mean "heavy" or "fat." People have always been that way. A Centennial Message from the International Herald Tribune

NOTES ON A CENTURY

The author was an editorial staffer of the Paris Herald from 1939-40, then served in the U.S. Army during World War II. Since that time, he has published 28 novels and more than 100 magazine stories.

In May 1939 I arrived in Paris, 24 years old and dreaming of a career as a glamorous foreign correspondent, inspired by the likes of Vincent Sheean and John Gunther.

Qualifications? My previous job had been a $15-aweek copy boy on the old San Francisco Call-Bulletin. Among my limited as-sets I had a letter of introduction from some friendof-a-friend to Laurence Hills, director of the European Edition of the New York Herald Tribune.

WIN A FORTINI THROUGH THE MOST POPULAR LOTTERY OF NORTH-WEST GERMANY

Our greatly improved Nordwestdeutsche Klassenlotterie now offers even more attractive chances to win bigger and better prizes than ever before. There are exceptionally great possibilities of winning because the prizes are so well distributed that over 40 % of all ticket numbers win during the course of a lottery. This implies that one out of 2½ ticket numbers is luckythus creating the mathematical probability to win by participating with at least three

OVER 171 MILLION DM ARE GIVEN AWAY AND YOU COULD WIN A PRIZE OF 1 MILLION DM IN EACH DRAW!

NOW each class starts with a SUPER DRAW of a guaranteed 1 million DM, ½ million DM, ¼ million DM and 100,000 DM plus thousands of other prizes ranging up to 80,000 DM. In the following 3 draws of classes 1 to 5 there is 1 million DM or 10 × 100,000 DM among other prizes. Besides the guaranteed 1 million DM in the first 3 draws of the 6th class there is also A TWO MILLION DM PRIZE IN EACH OF THE THREE FINAL DRAWS! And - we are still maintaining our favourable ticket prices. Making millionaires is our business . . and ours is the only lottery that has the right to make this statement. The odds are really excellent - just take a look at the number of tickets issued (only 500,000 in all) and the unbelievable total of 200,054 prizes, which are given away. But considering the possibility of winning a super prize of 100,000 DM, 1 million DM or 2 million DM, you will find chances prove to be extremely good compared with other gambling games - especially as our ticket prices are unchanged. A complete lottery (series), covering a period of six months, is divided into 6 classes. Every class has 4 draws (one each Friday) except the 6th (main) class which has 6 drawing days running over 5 weeks. The total of winning numbers and the value of prizes increase from class to class up to the end of the series when the 3 TOP PRIZES OF 2 MILLION DM EACH are raffled.

A state-controlled lottery means security

All the draws and prizes in the game are controlled by a board of directors in Hamburg, who act for and on behalf of the six German Federal States sponsoring the Nordwestdeur-sche Klasseniottene. Total agreement must be reached concerning the drawing dates and the determination of prizes shown on the winning plan, which has to be drawn up and published before the series starts. The winning plan together with the Rules and Regulations determine the game. All draws are held in public and there is the guarantee that each winner will receive his prize.

We give a reliable service

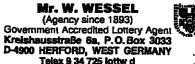

YOU WILL BE INFORMED AS SOON AS YOUR NUMBER HAS BEEN DRAWN! We'll not only send you the official winning lists along with the renewal tickets every 4 weeks, bu we'll also notify you personally and in strictest confidence immediately after you have won. Reports of Rights Violations Persist in Museveni's Uganda

New York Times Service

KAMPALA, Uganda - When Yowen Museveni was sworn in as president of Uganda 18 months ago, he promised to bring law and order back to a nation that had endured years of nightmarish violence, repression and bloodshed.

But since he seized power, Mr. Museveni himself has been accused of major human rights violations against those perceived as opponents by his government. International relief officials, human rights organizations and prominent Ugandans have asserted that Mr. Museveni's government, although it may not be as brutal as those of past rulers, has committed abuses ing houses and croos. that bring into question whether the country's pattern of chaos can soon end.

Mr. Museveni generally denies such charges. Nevertheless, the political opposition, independent human rights groups and international relief organizations accuse the Ugandan authorities of torturing prisoners and of indefinitely detaining without charge thousands of political opponents and rebel suspects in overcrowded and squalid military barracks and maximum-

Finding the Roots of Modern Greece

by Alan Cowell

THENS — Emblems of an Athens summer: On a warm, Sunday evening, in an amphitheater 1,900 years old on the lea of the Acropolis, Vladimir Ashkenazy plays Schubert and Schumann. The brilliance billows through old stonework dusted by dusk sliding toward indigo night, and haunted by other, impenetrable gloamings from the

A little way and several centuries away, on another night, in a soccer stadium ringed with police and motorcycles, Joe Cocker offers a strident counterpoint, all sax and electronics and batteries of sound, getting by with a little help from friends who, this time, are young, enthusiastic and

ing certain of neither, lies modern Greece with all its ambiguities and contradictions, recalling a heritage of antiquity long lost yet foisted onto the land by foreign visions, and evoking a present full of the borrowed totems of other foreigners' invention and

The debate is one that has seized outsiders for centuries: What is "Greek-ness," or, what, if any, is the strand that ties the crass sprawl and the ill temper, the noise of modern Athens to older times perceived as a halcyon age of creation, thought and inspiration in the rose-glow of reinvention? The answer, many foreigners, and Greeks, too, say bluntly, is: None.

sion seems to offend a nation aware of a past too grand to be lived up to, born of a history that offers no easy answers, and chronicled by poets like Ni-kos Kazantzakis who wrote of "the doubleborn soul of Greece."

It is a discussion that is fraught with prides too easy to offend and sensitivities that collide in the talking. In the early 19th century, in Lord Byron's time, for instance, some European travelers termed the Greeks barbarians for failing to shelter and stroke the relics of their own antiquity -a rude epithet no Greek of any period would

There is, said Niko Stavroulakis, the Cretan curator of Athens's Jewish Museum and an expert on the history of Byzantium, "ancient Greece and modern Greece and the myth that has been circulating since the 19th century that they have some kind of

There's no link between classical antiquity and modern Greece except that which was provided by the Roman Empire and the Orthodox Church, Modern Greece has been done violence to by European romanticism, and made to feel self-conscious about it," he said. That, possibly, might be part of Kazantzakis's double-soul.

Ancient Greece was a string of citystates, pagan in its beliefs, prodigious in its architecture and intellectual legacy - one that has inspired European thinkers and poets for centuries. Modern Greece, since its creation in 1830, has evolved as a Westem nation-state, built on the rump of an oriental empire, after centuries of Byzantine and Ottoman rule.

That history, said John Zervos, the director of the Athens Center, where foreigners learn the Greek language, left a divided legacy that endures in modern Greece. There was, he said, "the classical Greek, beroic, straightforward, artistic, innovative. And there was the Byzantine Greek, conniving, underhanded, canny."

Greece, he and others have noted, knew no Renaissance in the manner of Western Europe, because, for almost four centuries until 1830, what is now Greece was a millet of the Ottoman Empire. So what, then, endures, from classical to modern times?

"The architectural lines of ancient Greece are not to be found in the few (fortunately) imitative miniatures in Greece today, nor in the bastard Mediterranean buildings that make of Athens today a monotonous commonplace," said Kimon Friar, who has translated much Greek poetry into English, in the introduction to his anthology, "Modern Greek Verse,"

But, unlike some others, Friar traces some links. "Greek traditions," he wrote, flow like underground currents through Homeric, classical, Byzantine, medieval and modern times, sometimes murmuring and subdued, sometimes jetting to the surface, finding an outlet in folk ballads during the 400 years of the Ottoman occupation, and branching into many fertilizing and irrigating streams after the Greek War

And, like many others, Friar depicts the Orthodox Church as a kind of custodian of language and culture, a descendant perhaps of earlier times when Greek became Chrisianity's first language.

The tradition traced by Friar - and disputed by others - is perhaps most evident in the modern Greek poetry he has translated, a statement, almost, of a linguistic continuity of some kind that has survived the abrupt breaks in tradition that came, for instance, with the official banishment of pagan beliefs in A.D. 395. Inversely, too, there is a kind of bond that links modern. Western thought with the world of ancient Greece through the impact of Greek texts and models on some of those figures who have molded Western-cultural and philosophical traditions. "Luther could read Homer in the original," said Emilios Bouratinos, the Greek cultural assistant at the U.S. Embassy. "Michelangelo was inspired by Greek sculpture. Galileo was saying the same things as an ancient Greek astronomer. Greece was an inspiration for others - Shakespeare and Racine.

Yet, he said, "Today the best one can see. in plays and books is a reflection of Western philosophy, Western theater, Western music. So what is particularly Greek? The

That, he said, produced a schizophrenia. The Greek today is very keen on appearing Western. He considers the West to be the high point of civilization." So, he con-Western or popular Greek. Between the bouzouki and Mozart, there is no bridge." At the Athens Festival, held from mid-June to mid-September, the most vaunted theatrical productions are those, staged in the ancient theater of Epidaurus, of the ancient Greek classics.

"The Greeks," said Zervos, "are only. now beginning to have a relationship with their past." True, he said, some well-known Greek performers, such as Maria Callas, have made their names abroad, but the thrust of the modern nation was to seek inspiration from foreign sources.

"We like foreign things," Zervos said, "whether it's blue jeans or automobiles. We preserve our monuments because the foreigners are still interested."

Against all this, Joe Cocker's show, and those of other rock bands seemed a part of that hankering for the new and the foreign. Yet Cocker seemed to feel obliged to make his own obeisance to Greece's past.

Sitting in his $2,000-a-day hotel suite looking onto the Acropolis, he said, he thought sometimes of Pythagoras and that made him, he said, "very emotional." And then he laughed and the hand played on. © 1987 The New York Times

The Real Pasolini: More Gadfly Than Creator

U.S. Embassy.

by Thomas Quinn Curtiss

IER PAOLO PASOLINI, who was a symbol of postwar changes in politics and in sexual mores before his violent death in 1975, has become a period figure whose films are now taught in universities rather than banned. A sympathetic portrait of Pasolini by Enzo Siciliano, a Milanese journalist and author - now published in English by the Bloomsbury Press of London - provides a running commentary of the zigzag history of postwar Italy against which the director-

Born in Bologna in 1922, the son of an army officer and a doting mother, Pasolini was a precocious child, in his schooldays already writing lyric blank verse and contemplating political reforms for the betterment of his countrymen. He was not the common bookworm weakling, keeping in physical trim by participating in soccer games, swimming competitions and bicycling excursions.

He thought of himself as a philosopher and naïvely tried to resolve Christian and Marxist ideology. Toward the end of World War II, Pasolini joined the Communist Party. His proud spirit revolted at submitting to orders and his inborn Catholicism held him in its grip, though it failed to still his pagan yearnings. He was expelled from the party for his overt homosexuality.

He had a deep compassion for the underdog and roamed Rome's shanty towns to record what he saw in two novels relating the lot of the excluded. He drew the grim background with some stylist flashes, but he was an outsider looking in.

Federico Fellini engaged him as an assistant and scenarist and soon Pasolini was making his first film, "Accattone," set in a Vittorio Gassman: of acting and direction; and acted by inhabitants of that wasteland. of the ideas that guided him. He and many ous stranger who intrudes to bring salvation to a troubled household inspires each was unique, although long before D.W. member of the house by bedding them in Griffith had woven the Christ story into his turn. Nor could the movie-parlor magic epic, "Intolerance," to contrast it with the properly depict the elevation of the bornanew domestic who suggested Mary Poppins on one of her flights and evoked laugh-

Again Pasolini had created a scandal, in the majority. They denounced the film as this time with the clergy in dispute as to whether "Teorema" was sacred or profane. "Pasolinian." Siciliano records, was now an adjective used by the press to indicate everything in Rome concerning the sub-proletariat, low life and homosexuality.

He was charged in one instance with an attempted armed robbery of a filling station. He had talked with an attendant, son was a courteous, smiling man of mild, asking him about his work and life to find material for a film script. The attendant swore that Pasolini had held a gun to his throat. The case was dismissed for lack of evidence, but it augmented his notoriety.

As permissiveness spread in the late 1960s, censorship retreated and Pasolini had a freer hand. He made the most of it. Probably his producers were responsible for his efforts to bring Boccaccio, Chaucer, 'The Arabian Nights" and the Marquis de Sade to the screen.

His "Decameron" had spirit and flavor, there was pictorial beauty to his "Arabian Nights," though in exotic magic it was inferior to the exotic fantasy of Douglas Fairbanks's "The Thief of Baghdad," but The Canterbury Tales" descended to burlesque humor and even inserted a Charlie Chaplin figure into its medieval midst. In his final film, "Salo, or the 120 Days of Sodom," he appeared intent on dramatizing sado-masochistic obsessions.

On Nov. 2, 1975, his battered body was found on a deserted field outside Rome. He had been murdered by a homosexual prostitute but, from the evidence that Siciliano presents, the possibility exists that the youth had not acted alone, that the crime was politically motivated. Mystery continues to hover over the case.

In retrospect Pasolini seems to have been more gadfly than creator. He accomplished some scenes of beautiful texture on the screen, but he did not either alter or forward the medium. He struggled again and again to produce in filmic images the concepts of his violent imagination, a feat he only rarely achieved. Be that as it may, he has already become a legend.

New Smithsonian Building: Intriguing but Misleading

by Paul Richard

ASHINGTON — The Smithsonian Institution's newest build-ing on the Mall has been completed, but one can't help wondering what it is they have built.

Its scale is deceptive, its architectural allusions intriguing but misleading. No wonder the new Quadrangie, which will open to the public on Sept. 28, baifles passers-by.

You see a trim Victorian garden with stately gates and gravel walks, clipped trees and parterres. That elegant, four-acre park calls to mind a day of parasols, straw boaters and croquet. But it's actually brand-new and cost $3 million. The Enid A. Haupt Garden (she gave the Smithsonian the money) feels comfortably earth solid when you step upon its lawns. But there is hollowness beneath you. It's been grown upon a roof.

You see a pair of granite-faced pavilions. Both send out mixed messages. One is roofed with pyramids that hint at ancient Egypt, though the new museum underneath it, the Arthur M. Sackler Gallery, holds no Egyptian art. The other is roofed with domes like those of the tiled mosques of Iran. It leads to the National Museum of African Art, a museum that, of course, contains no Iranian art.

You see a third building called the Kiosk. It is domed, round, almost cute. Built between the Castle and the Freer Gallery of Art, it has the slightly silly look of a folly in a park. The Kiosk is the entrance to the third part of the complex, the part least well un-

What you can't see is enormous. What appears to be a trio of nonprepossessing buildings is actually one vast one, a structure of 360,000 square feet (about 33,450 square meters) - most of which has been constructed below ground. The work of Jean-Paul Carlhian, a fanciful designer, it cost $73.2 million. In some ways it resembles a huge, flat-bottomed boat, double hulled and waterproofed and shoved beneath the ground.

Its first two decks are occupied by the new museums. The third (whose floor is more than 50 feet below the level of the street) includes an 8,000-square-foot concourse, a sort of indoor avenue, and will house offices and some exhibition space.

The seed for all this was planted — inadvertently — by Charles Lang Freer (1856-

Freer was a disciple of James McNeill

Whistler, the art-for-art's-sake painter, and once he made his fortune, he gave himself wholeheartedly to the subtle contemplation of the high aesthetic life.

The home gallery he built himself was sky lit, screne, bare. No cases held his holdings of Japanese and Chinese and Middle Eastern art. Instead, at his summons, his former coachman Stephen would bring out Freer's art treasures one object at a time. The collector was convinced the beauties of his objects were diminished by the crassness of artificial

Had Freer been more tolerant, the nextdoor Sackler Gallery might never have been built. folk art on exhibit. The scholar Milo Beach, who will be running the Sackler, said, "I see the Freer as a sort of Courtauld, an institute of advanced study, an extraordinary graduate school for specialists and scholars already committed to their subject. The Sackler comes in as a kind of undergraduate college, a place where students can be introduced to Oriental art." Freer valued high refinement and absolute decorum. Sackler, who was Brooklyn-born, was an earthier and friendlier and more ebullient man. "Even in his 70s, he was happy to climb ladders, in the coldest days of winter, in the Quadrangle's construction pit," Beach said. "He had always been interested in the roots of human genius. That's one reason why he loved the oldest Chinese

The Sackler, as it opens, owns perhaps 1,000 pieces of Japanese, Chinese and Near Eastern art. Though all of them are gifts from Arthur M. Sackler (1913-1987), it was not he who chose them for the new museum. They were picked from Sackler's holdings by the scholar Thomas Lawton, the director of the Freer. Sackler, a New York medical researcher and publisher (who made much money from Valium), was also a collector of far-ranging taste.

The Sackler has three fathers — Sackler,

The museum has a father, its founder,

Warren Robbins. It also has a mother, or at least a stepmother. She is Sylvia H. Williams, tho was appointed its director in 1983. Sometimes striving toward a common goal - and sometimes working at cross-purposes - they together are responsible for the partly old, but mostly new, museum on the Mall. Most museum founders, the Mellons and the Hirshhorns, the Sacklers and the Freers, were men of mighty wealth. Robbins never has been rich. He'd always earned his living -as a school teacher in New Hampshire, as cultural attaché in West Germany and Austria — and yet he somehow managed to create his own museum of art, which opened

Robbins, 64, quit the U.S. diplomatic corps in 1962 with his heart set on a grand but not very precise dream. The first thing that he did was found something called the "Center for Cross-Cultural Communication," and then set out to raise some cash.

He said, "One of the 22 projects I submitted to the Ford Foundation was one for a museum. It took five years, but then, in 1967, they finally came through with a $250,000 grant. We also got the first grant - for $20,000 — handed out by the National Endowment for the Humanities. We were the nation's first African museum. We tried to Actually it was more than a museum of African art. At first its programs sprawled. It opened on Capitol Hill because Robbins had acquired there the modest little row house that once had been the home of the abolitionist Frederick Douglass.

It collected many sorts of art. For instance. Robbins much admired the paintings of Henry Ossawa Tanner, then little known. Tanner had had very little to do with Africa he'd been raised in Philadelphia and trained by Thomas Eakins — but he was American and black and highly skilled as well. So Robbins snapped up Tanners. His Afro-American collection eventually included 60 pictures by Tanner, as well as about 200 other works by 19th-century black American painters.

Robbins eventually got tired. He said, "I was running out of money. I was running myself ragged." So he conceived another plan. He spoke to S. Dillon Ripley, the spin college her the former Smithsonian secretary and in 1979, the Museum of African As he was 1979, the many of As he was 1979, the was the Museum of African Art became the newest branch of the Smithsonian Institu-

Through Cecil Beaton's Lens: Museum Gets Royal Treasure

by Andy Grundberg

ONDON - The latest treasure to come the way of the Victoria and Albert Museum is an archive of photographs by Cecil Beaton, the fashion photographer, writer and bon vivant who died in 1980. Consisting of some 8,000 negatives and transparencies and more than 10,000 prints, the collection is as remarkable for its subject matter as for its author. Every one of the thousands of pictures portrays a member of Britain's royal family.

Beaton photographed Britain's royalty regularly from 1939 to 1970, starting with Queen Mother and ending with Prince Andrew as a small child. His first portraits were done on assignment for Vogue, but they proved so flattering that the royal household from called him for portrait sessions. He became, as the museum's director, Roy og, has observed, Britain's unofficial t photographer.

he photographs are the promised gift of an Hose, Beaton's personal secretary for more than 25 years, who received them as a bequest of the photographer. Hose and Mark Haworth-Booth, the Victoria and Albert's curator of photography, have selected more than 100 representative images for a show that will go on display in the museum's photography galleries, beginning Sept. 16. sized collection, it is clear that there are many marvelous photographs in its midst. Some are elegant compositions by them-selves, but most are compelling for reasons of both history and nostalgia. To see Princess Margaret as a slim, elegant young woman of 18, or her mother as a mature prewar beauty, is enough to start one singing "Rule Britannia." One shouldn't, however, make the mistake of considering these merely as mentary images.

Beaton, a consummate stylist, knew how to make his subjects gleam. He made sure they were dressed in the height of fashion, always gave them something to do with their hands and photographed them in front of painted backdrops that suggested vast, cathedral-like spaces. Coming from the world of fashion magazines, he naturally portrayed every queen and princess in front of his lens as if she were a fashion plate. The royals liked what they saw, and they liked it when Beaton's pictures of them appeared in mass-

In a sense, Beaton's pictures are the harbingers of today's relentless recording of the lives of the royal family — the appetite for which seems as strong in the United States as it does in Great Britain. While bestowing an air of imperial elegance, they make their imposing subjects seem human, like ordinary mortals. This dual message - that princes and princesses are embodiments of human nobility, yet at the same time they appear just like you or I -- constitutes the essence of their public celebrity. As Strong remarks in his foreword to the show's catalogue, Beaton arrived "at a crucial moment in the history of the Crown, when the institution had been badly shaken by the abdication crisis." King Edward's marriage to Wallis Simpson made for plenty of press copy, but it did little for the status of the monarchy itself. It seems fair, then, to read Beaton's photographs as instruments in the reconstruction of the royal image — as tools in an innocent but not insignificant public-relations gambit.

Beaton usually posed his royal subjects in formal attire and frilly gowns, as if they were constantly prepared to attend a party. But he also showed them as representatives of the British people. For example, at the beginning of the war he photographed Princess Elizabeth, a teen-ager in a mannish uniform. The occasion was her installation as the commander of a royal guard unit, an honorary post, but the message was symbolic: The royal family was mobilizing for the war. Not for the first time, the monarchy functioned as the image of the country as a whole.

It would be an understatement to say that much has changed since Beaton posed the Queen Mother sitting, parasol in hand, between two classical marble torsos. More recently, tabloids like London's News of the World were splashing telephoto glimpses of Princess Diana in a bikini across their front pages, purportedly to show that she has gained weight on her vacation.

Such surreptitiously obtained photo-graphs are a far cry from the "official" images purveyed by Beaton, but they are perhaps an inevitable outgrowth of his activity. One might say that Beaton succeeded too well; in resuscitating the image of the Windsor monarchy, he made it part of the same mass-media celebrity machinery that has brought the likes of Jackie Onassis, Joan Collins and Madonna.

The current fascination with the private lives of Di, Fergie and their husbands is surely on a scale that neither Beaton nor the royal family could have anticipated. But it shows how powerful photography can be in the process of forming public images. Whether the picture is a fuzzy, heavily retouched image of a princess in a swimsuit, or one of Beaton's exquisitely polished, regal compositions, it creates an insatiable appetite for more. This hunger, perhaps, is the essential condition of all celebrity.

Beckett by Shivaun O'Casey

A scene from 'Happy Days.'

by Andrew L. Yarrow

EW YORK - It takes nerve for a shy, 16-year-old girl to tell Samuel Beckett that he "ought to be more joyful," but that is what Shivaun O'Casey said when she met the author whose dramas about life's hopelessness and meaninglessness have become classics of 20thcentury theater.

. Now, 32 years later, O'Casey, who has remained friends with the Irish-born writer, is making her directing debut with Beckett's "Happy Days," which opened this week for an eight-week run at the Samuel Beckett Theater on West 42d Street.

The play, which had its premiere at New York's Cherry Lane Theater in 1961, is a sionate yet pessimistic tale about a cheerful, talkative woman named Winnie who is buried waist-deep and, later, neckdeep in a mound of sand, and her less-thanloquacious male companion, Willie, who rarely emerges from his own nearby hole. "I didn't realize what a difficult play it is to direct," said O'Casey, the daughter of Sean O'Casey, the Irish playwright. "It's very minimal, like an abstract painting. If you put in the wrong brush stroke, it's no-ticed."

"The tragic-comic line in Beckett is also very fine," added Mary Beth Yarrow, who is co-producing the play with O'Casey and Jim Stark. "The humor and the tragedy are there simultaneously." "There's a great sadness in the play, but it's redeemed by Winnie's humor," said O'Casey, a soft-spoken woman whose resemblance to her father goes beyond her silver hair and blue eyes to her passionate interest m social causes. "It's a play about what middle-class morality does to people, and about a relationship between a man and woman and what they've done to each other. Willie is a kind of Caliban," she said. "He's of the earth, lecherous and lewd. Win-nie's quite proper and religious, and everything has to be in the right place.

"I visualize her as a lady from Foxrock," she said, referring to the middle-class Dublin neighborhood where Beckett was born and the name that O'Casey, Yarrow and Stark chose for their production company. O'Casey grew up in the British seaside town of Torquay, in Devon, and was introstudying acting and scenic design. Her father and Beckett never met, but O'Casey said that they corresponded and that she "relayed sages" between them during the years before her father's death in 1964. "Beckett once described Sean as 'a master duced to Beckett in London, where she was of burlesque,' and Sean liked and admired Beckett very much," she said. "But he once wrote, 'I'm not waiting for Godot.' He felt the world could change, and Sam probably doesn't think it will."

In plays such as "The Plough and the Stars" and "Shadow of a Gunman, O'Casey's father was an outspoken champion of the poor and oppressed, whereas Beckett, the 81-year-old author of "Waiting for Godot" and "Endgame," has generally es-chewed politics and avoided any discussion about the meaning of his works.
O'Casey recalled that Beckett once wrote to her: "I never give interviews, except unwittingly, having nothing to say on any subject under the sun."

But despite the differences between their styles and philosophies, O'Casey said that her father and Beckett, "as people, were both very kind and caring."

"Both lived very simply," she added, "and both had extraordinary eyes that penetrated

Since leaving Devon, O'Casey has acted in and even been a hatmaker for many British stage productions. But it was only after moving to New York five years ago and taking a class with Robert Lewis, a founder of the Actors Studio, that she decided to try her hand at directing.

"I've always hankered after directing, and Robert urged me to direct," O'Casey said. The obvious choices seemed to be either a Beckett play or one by her father, such as "The Silver Tassie," a 1929 "anti-war requiem" that she said she wants to direct. The decision to produce "Happy Days" evolved out of discussions with Aideen O'Kelly, who plays the sand-bound Winnie, and Yarrow, a producer of television documentaries. They videotaped a reading of the play last month with O'Kelly and John Leighton, who is the enigmatic Willie, and O'Casey and O'Kelly brought the tape to Paris for Beck-"Because the rhythms are very important to Sam, he asked to read with Aideen," O'Casey said. "He said to keep it down, not to make Winnie too capable a woman, but he thought it was wonderful."

Their only small conflict was over the play's sparse set, in which Beckett intended to include only one barren mound. "I have three mounds onstage," O'Casey explained, "so Sam said, 'What are the other two for?" "He didn't talk me out of them, though,"

she said, smiling. "He said, 'It's your produc-

Technicians See the Slide As a Temporary Setback

By VARTANIG C. VARTAN

WALL STREET WATCH

New York Times Service

EW YORK - What are the stock market's technicians saying about the Dow Jones industrial average's ragged retreat from the record 2,722,42 set on Aug. 25? For the most part, their work indicates that stock prices rose too far too fast — the Dow had hovered at 2,220 in late

May — and were poised for a pullback of limited proportions.

Robert R. Prechter Jr. of Gainesville, Georgia, regarded by many as the market's leading technical guru, said in the Aug. 31 issue of his investment advisory letter, The Elliott Wave Theorist, that "the stock market is likely ending a high-level correction in the 2,600-2,640 range, with new highs due in September." However, he added: "A break below 2,600 would make possible a drop back to the 2,300s, which is the deepest selioff allowed at this point danger signals." in the wave development."

Mr. Prechter said Wednesday that his latest as ly represented "good news," rather than any dire forecast. "It says that the maximum market risk is 200 to 300 points, while the upside potential is still greater than 1,000 points from here." he explained. "This is merely an interruption of a major bull market,

"None of our

and my long-term target still calls for a top in the Dow between 3,600 and 3,700 next year."

Those who look for more fundamental causes of market behavior say that fluctuations in the dollar and interest rates, the state of the economy and the outlook for corporate profits are producing the recent whipsaw action. Whatever the reasons, the market's favorite barometer fell 51.98 points, or 2 percent, on Tuesday, followed Wednesday by a decline of 8.93 points, to 2.602.04, after trading below 2,600 for most of the session.

Mr. Prechter's technical outlook is based on the Elliott Wave Theory, which holds that stock prices move up and down in distinct waves to complete any single bull market or bear market. The 38-year-old Yale graduate set out his long-term case for the bull market shortly after it began more than five years ago with the Dow at 776.92.

N THE CURRENT market, Mr. Prechter said that the one indicator that flashed a warning signal to him late last month was "a slowing in the market's upside momentum when the Dow got above 2,700." He was in New York Wednesday to address a conference sponsored by Monness, Crespi, Hardt & Co... a brokerage firm.

Some technical analysts, who study sentiment measures and other internal market dynamics, see no particular significance in a break in the Dow below 2,600. Edward P. Nicoski of Piper, Jaffray & Hopwood, shares this view. "Two mouths ago, with the Dow near 2,400, we went virtually to a fully invested position in our model portfolio," said the Minneapolis-based analyst.

"But when our short-term indicators recently started to turn negative," he added, "we began raising cash. For example, we track 325 micro-groups in the market and the number of new highs reached a peak last week and then started to contract. I think the market is groping for a bottom, and over the next several months it should trade between 2,500 and 2,700."

Robert S. Robbins, a technical analyst for Robinson-Humphrey Co. in Atlanta, turned cautious on Aug. 14 - one day after the Dow briefly crossed above 2,700 during trading hours. "I sensed trouble in the blue-chip feeding frenzy and, listening to market participants, there was clearly some euphoria in the air," he said. "This correction conceivably could carry the Dow to as low as 2,450, which would mean a pullback of 10 percent from its high. But this is still a super bull market."

At Kidder, Peabody & Co., Dennis E. Jairett is one technical rnalyst whose optimism remains unruffled, "None of our indicators are flashing danger signals," he said.

Cray Cuts Earnings Estimates

Stock Continues Sharp Decline

MINNEAPOLIS — Cray Re-search Inc. on Wednesday lowered its estimate of earnings growth to between 15 percent and 20 percent over the next few years.

The company's earnings had grown at 60 percent annually in the past two years, a spokeswoman indicators are flashing

The lower estimate, which ac-companies the cancellation of a major supercomputer research pro-ject, reflects Cray's expectation for

"much more moderate growth" in the future, the spokeswoman said. In New York, Cray stock continued to fall in reaction to its decision to cancel the supercomputer pro-ject and the resignation of a key executive. It was down $6.75 to $97.75 in heavy trading on the New York Stock Exchange

Analysts said Cray's ability to develop next-generation supercomputers was now in doubt due to the resignation of Steve Chen, the project's leader and chief designer of Cray's most successful supercom-

Moreover, they said other prod-uct delays had clouded the company's outlook through 1988.

John Rutledge, an analyst with Dillon, Read & Co. said Mr. Chen's departure was a major blow to Cray's supercomputer develop-ment efforts, considered the best in the world.

Clearly, Steven Chen was one of the key architects of Cray's re-search as it is today," Mr. Rutledge

Mr. Chen's project, known as the MP, was not scheduled for completion until the early 1990s, and thus its cancellation will not have an impact on Cray's short-term re-

Analysts said Cray's near-term earnings would be hurt by prob-lems with its Y-MP supercomputer, its next release, which had been set for volume shipments in 1988. Delays have pushed that date back by about a year, analysts said.

PARIS — The slide in the price of crude oil saved the French economy 85 billion francs in the Trib. ($14.14 billion) last year, the National Statistics Institute said Thursday.
The average fall in oil prices of 53 percent was the sharpest decline within a year ever registered. Companies, rather than private house-holds, picked up most of the benefits, pushing up profit margins by obtaining productivity gains and avoiding passing on all the decline in oil prices.

The oil import savings compared with total

French gross domestic product, calculated for the market economy at current prices, of 4.2 trillion francs. GDP measures the total value of a nation's goods and services but excludes income from Much of the benefit from cheaper oil went to companies, with 58.6 percent of the total savings. Households had 38.6 percent of the savings.

But the institute said the drop in energy prices masked the deterioration in the balance of manufacturing exports, This declined to show a surplus of 32,2 billion francs last year from a 83 billion surplus in 1985, the institute said. Demand for French products grew by 3.2 percent in the year, less; than the 4.3 percent upturn experienced on average by other OECD countries.

THE MAKING OF McPAPER: The Inside Story of USA Today. By Peter Prichard. Andrews, McMeel & Parker/Universal Press Syndicate, 4400 Johnson Dr., Fairway, Kan.

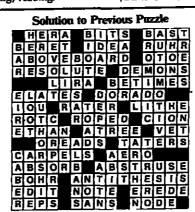

When USA Today began publishing in September, 1982, the wizards of Wall Street and Madison Avenue were virtually unanimous in their hoots of derision and predictions of failure. Editors of other newspapers were equally dismissive. There was just no way, everyone agreed, that a new newspaper — starting from scratch, distributed nationally, relying almost exclusively on newsstand sales, filled with the same stories in Boston as in Burbank. California - could possibly succeed in the United States today.

But it's always been a grievous error to underestimate either Allen Neuharth or the appetite of the American public for trivia, superficiality and self-deception. USA Today, Neuharth's brainchild, will never be confused with The New York Times; USA Today is called "McPaper" because its format of very short stories (news McNuggets) amid a blizzard of color pictures, charts and graphs make it seem like fast-food journalism. The paper will be 5 years old next month, though, and it already has the second-highest circulation and the highest readership — of any daily newspaper in the United States.

Surveys show that many people feel guilty about not reading a daily newspaper, so Neuharth made it easy for them to assuage their guilt; he created USA Today so people could buy it and persuade themselves they were reading a newspaper. Neuharth created a newspaper that is more like a morning television news show than a traditional newspaper — bright, visual, nothing to severely tax the intellect.

Prichard, a USA Today employee, had access to all of Neuharth's files and memos, in addition to the files of most other USA Today executives, and his account of their struggles, squabbles and exhausting workload in the USA Today launch makes for intriguing and sometimes amusing (or, on occasion, appall-(David Shaw, LAT) ing) reading.

Septing David Sarnoff and William Paley, districted as chairment. "Bill told me," Sarnoff lates in recounted with a chuckle, "they'd have to carry him out with his boots on." Lewis J. Paper's biography of the CBS empire builder shows Paley meant what he said. Nearing 86, recently reinstated as chairman of the CBS board of directors following a series of management upheavals. Paley remains a formidable ence on the broadcasting scene. him he $5 billion the $5 billion entertainment and information complex he nurtured and built.

Paper's intensive probe was accomplished without Paley's approval, although CBS associates and personal friends opened files to him and reminisced freely. The portrait that emerges is generally admiring. Paley's personal charm, his sophisticated life style, his conquest of the social and est needle kine style, his conquest of the social and art worlds, his sagacity and courage in challenging, and ultimately besting. Sarnoff's mighty NBC are defuly drawn.

Yet almost as formidable as Paley's tri umphs were his defeats, and Paper does not =1 stint them.

In his pursuit of an often elusive quarry, Paper has succeeded in achieving a rare degree of editorial balance. He has also provided the most penetrating biographical look thus far at a complex man whose CBS boots are still firmly on.

THE WORLD AND RICHARD NIXON, IN C.L. Sulzberger. Prentice-Hall Press, 1 Gulf &: Western Plaza, New York, N.Y. 10023.

After more than a decade in the political wilderness. Richard M. Nixon is staging comeback. This one is for his place in the history books. Because of Watergate, there will said in the always be an asterisk next to Nixon's name: But as C.L. Sulzberger demonstrates in The World and Richard Nixon, "a revisionist study of the former president, Nixon left a record of

of the former president, Nixon left a record of similar accomplishments in foreign policy.

Sulzberger, a former chief foreign correspondent for The New York Times, has known with the statesmen with whom the former president. with the statesmen with whom the former president worked. From his firsthand experiences including numerous interviews with Nixon, well as from other source materials, Subberger 13 and 14 and 15 a result of Watergate. At the same time, here argues that "to denigrate Nixon's foreign possession licy because it was flawed by the Vietnam ending inheritance and overshadowed by the dirty of Waterstate mess in to missead Nixon's himself. Watergate mess is to misread Nixon's historia dess cal importance. It would be like dismissing the life of the like dismissing the life of th only an alcoholic." (Steve Neal, NYT)

E ACH year since 1954 the American Contract Bridge League has provided a major service to players everywhere by preparing a substantial book describing each world championship. The latest in this valuable series, describing the events in Miami Beach last September, is more complicated than most. It dethe four major events, mixed pairs, women's pairs, open pairs and open teams, and it is available for $15.95 from the league, P.O. Box 161192, Memphis Tennessee 38186

Greg Foster of the United States retained his title in the men's 110meter hurdles; Sabine Busch of East Germany broke the meet record in winning the women's 400 hurdles and another East German, Thomas Schoenlebe, scored the biggest upset of the meet so far by beating innocent Egbunike of Nigeria and Butch Reynolds of the United States in the men's 400.

With the decathlon having gotten underway, defending champion Daley Thompson of Britain was struggling. Competing for the first time in more than one year, the world record-holder was in fifth place after the fourth event, the high jump, with 3,483 points. Tor-sten Voss of East Germany led with 3,645 points, with teammate Christian Schenk second at 3,585.

Schoenlebe, who had said that he just hoped to reach the 400 final, blew by Egbunike and Reynolds in the last 100 meters to win in 44.33 seconds and called it "a big sur-prise for me." Potomac Peace Panic

By Russell Baker

EW YORK — Washington is Nin the grip of a peace scare. President Reagan no longer says "evil empire." It has been months since he talked about making Marxist Nicaragua say "uncle." Is in any monder the city is tense?

it any wonder the city is tense?
It has not suffered the ravages of ace since 1941. One yuppie told this column, "I've heard the Bible says there might be peace and rumors of peace, but I didn't find it corroborated in the works of Ayn Rand, so naturally I didn't worry

Always keen to be where the action is, this column made a hurried trip to Washington and stood on a terrace high in Georgetown overlooking the glittering lights of the rich and famous cold-war capital.

This column's host peered out over the majestic scene and spoke over the majestic scene and spoke words fraught with weightiness or.

Share? He can probably get away with that too. And do you know with that too. And do you know with that too. This column did not hear those words since (1) being a column, it had no ears. (2) when the words were uttered, a plane descending toward National Airport was passing eight feet overhead.

All right. I'll say it again," said the host. The next incoming airplane being 45 seconds away over Chevy Chase, he said, "The lights are going on again all over Georgetown; we shall not see them doused again in our time."

This was arrant nonsense, of course, and the host knew it, but as he had often said to me in the past when I chided him for talking foolishness, "I talk foolishness only because it seems to be what columns enjoy hearing. You must also admit that it is a foolishness fraught with meaningfulness."

With considerable shamefulness, this column had to concede that the meaningfulness of his foolishness did, in fact, lead this column a weightiness that was not without

"If you will allow me." said the host, "what you are trying to say is that my foolishness is justified by its fraughtness.

These Washington birds can throw jawbreakers and mind stupefiers at you all night.

This column is not so easily led Soviet mole." off the scent. It had come to investigate the peace scare. Upon seeing that this column intended to press its questions fearlessly, the host, a rich and famous conservative, not to mention a certified paranoid, sat in a sound-proof room and gave this column the full story.

Yes, it was true that the president had gone soft as much on peace. The evidence? He handed me a Top Secret telegram sent from the White House to the Kremlin. It proposed a summit meeting at which the two of them - the president and the sinister Soviet master. Gorbachev --- would make a joint TV appearance singing "Ain't Gonna Practice War No More."

Yes, reader, the peace threat is that acute. How are you going to feel when the president orders you lectors and aficionados of sword sport had failed to form a National Sword Association to lobby for the citizen's right to bear swords.

This column's Washington host pointed out that it was silly to beat America's swords into plowsbares For one thing, he said. "Swords don't kill people, people kill people." For another, the incessant American agricultural surpluses are demonstrable proof that we already have more plowshares than we know what to do with.

How then explain the president's turning into a bleeding-heart leftwing, anti-war wacko who was willing to let Nicaragua's Ortega get away with refusing to say "tio," much less "uncle"?

The host winked and said, "Cherche: la Premiere Dume." "Are you telling me to search the

It is a peculiarity that lingers as a result of the four years she spent working in the South as a member of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee during the civil rights movement in the early 1960s. "We always had toothbrushes in our pockets," she recalled, "I still carry one, not because I think I am going to be jailed, but just out of habit."

King went on to become an adviser to President Jimmy Carand was appointed by him as deputy director of Action, the federal agency that oversees the Peace Corps and VISTA. She has written "Freedom Song. A Per-sonal Story of the 1960s Civil Rights Movement," just puhlished by William Morrow, In a foreword to the book.

which is dedicated to 12 people who lost their lives working for the civil rights movement, Mayor Andrew Young of Atlanta writes: "So little is known, and even less is understood, about the complexity of forces that changed the American Southland in the 1960s, America needs to know about the Amzie Moores, Elfa-Bakers, Casey Haydens, Bob Zellners. Annelle Ponders and many others, as well as the Martin Luther Kings."

"The thing that confounds and confuses me," King said recently at her home in Washington, "is how much has already been forgotten. Americans have forgotten how people put their lives on the

She said that during the Missis sippi Summer Project of 1964, 30 people were beaten, 1,000 were arrested, 35 churches were hurned, 30 homes bombed and three of her fellow workers -James Chaney, Andrew Goodman and Michael Schwerner were murdered. The project was pivotal in the civil rights movement, and out of it grew the Freedom Democratic Party, which sought political representation

"Some of us came out stronger," says Mary King.

University, King came to "the movement" in the summmer of 1962 as what she described as an unsophisticated, idealistic minister's daughter. She was one of five whites on a staff of 41, most of them young and students, who were paid $10 a week to work in rural areas and $20 a week to work in the Atlanta office. While other civil rights groups worked through the courts and the churches, SNCC worked in the rural areas of the South using the factics of direct action - sitins, picketing and an extensive unter registration campaign. They were the shock troops of the Freedom Riders.

"It was the most pure manifestation of democracy that I have ever encountered. A group of soung people who were intense. who cared passionately but who came without ideology and without foreordained conclusions. We believed that determination and working together would produce change. There was a certain amount of naïvete in all this, but my naïveté gave me strength and power because I didn't know how awesome the odds were." She had her toothbrush with rights workers. But it also broke the spirit of some of them. "Some of us came our stronger: others were crushed." King said. One casualty, she said, was Dennis Sweeney, a young man she met while working in SNCC and married in 1965. On March 15. 1980. "We had been telling his people that for months. that the pope's security people wouldn't allow him to be that exposed for so long," said Tom Mc-Coy, producer of "Celebration of Joy" scheduled for the Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum, "Apparently, communication is so bad that only recently did Domingo realize the pope wouldn't be listening." Metropolitan Opera officials confirmed the Spanish tenor is scheduled to sing the title role in Verdi's opera "Otello" on Sept. 21. Domingo's presence at a rehearsal Sept. 15 was strongly urged, but was not essential, they said.

The St. Paul Chamber Orchestra says it has made the "revolutionary" decision to appoint three conductors to fill the position of music director vacated last spring by the violinist Pinchas Zukerman. The Minnesota orchestra named Christopher Hogwood, a British conductor, harpsichordist and scholar, as its new director of music, effective in September 1988. Hugh Wolff, music director of the New Jersey Symphony Orchestra, will become principal conductor, and John Adams, former composer in residence with the San Francisco Symphony. million. > John Whitney Payson says he fears that new tax rules and the rising art market mean many U.S.owned art treasures will be sold to foreigners. "I'm afraid we're going to begin losing a large part of our heritage because of this law," he said. So why is he selling Vincent van Gogh's "Irises," which his family has owned for 40 years, in a Sotheby's auction in New York Nov. 11? The cost of insuring the painting for travel and exhibition had become "lethal." he said. The painting was acquired in 1947 by Payson's mother. Joan Whitney Payson, a philanthropist, art collecand owner of the New York Mets baseball team. Payson said that proceeds from the sale would be used to create a family founda -. tion, a general endowment for Westbrook College in Maine, and a charitable arts foundation that would focus on Maine's "maritime!" heritage." Earlier this year, the Dutch painter's "Sunflowers" became the most expensive auctioned picture when a Japanese insurance company paid $39.9 million for it and another van Gogh, "The Bridge at Trinquetaille," was sold to a European collector for $20.2 ***
